The injection moulding process involves heating & injecting plastic material under pressure into a closed metal mould tool, allowing thousands or even millions of identical parts to be made quickly and cheaply. Injection molding is employed mainly in the production of solid objects. There are many types of manufacturing methods categorized under injection molding, such as thermoplastic injection molding, over molding, insert molding, cold runner molding and hot runner molding. Thermoplastic injection molding uses thermoplastic polymer, which implies that it changes to a liquid state when heated.

Below are the most common thermoplastics used in injection molding Acrylonitrile Butadiene Styrene, Acrylonitrile Butadiene Styrene (ABS), Amorphous Polymer Polyethylene, Polycarbonate, Polyamide (Nylon), High Impact Polystyrene, Polypropylene for Blow moulding raw material like HDPE & HD Injection.
